ABSTRACT

Devices, softwares and methods generate, in real time, indexing metadata for select portions of a telephone conversation or conference. The indexing metadata is generated responsive to inputs received while the conversation is being recorded live. The inputs are either by a user pressing a soft key on a telephone device, or by a voice conference bridge determining who is the dominant speaker in a multi-party conference.